For Stock on hand is okay.

For Stock on order, system is checking first the expiration date. After user changes the expiration date and press save button, the system checks for the expected delivering date. It should be better if the system check first for the expected delivering date (the mandatory field) and then checks for the expiration date.

Gustavo, please, explain what do you mean:

After user changes the expiration date and press save button, the system checks for the expected delivering date. It should be better if the system check first for the expected delivering date (the mandatory field) and then checks for the expiration date.
